Hardscaping Tips and Information

- Many homeowners enjoy matching the surface of the home with the exterior of the home. This allows the two environments to seamlessly flow into each other. For example, if you have stones outside your house, try incorporating them into your hardscape.
- Hardscapes should always feel like they have a purpose. Create a focus to catch the viewer's attention during the design process. However, please note that there are places where you can rest your eyes on the way. This is a great opportunity to take advantage of the soft features of landscaping.
- If there are too many straight lines, the landscape can feel unnatural and out of place. You need to feel real as if it wasn't planned while maintaining its visual appeal. Use curved and rounded edges in your designs to break things down and bring creativity to your outdoor space.
- Think about how your design affects the garden in your garden. You don't want the landscape to be flooded or deprived of water because of the hardscape design. Retaining walls and stone steps can dramatically improve the drainage of your garden. Use the material to solve the problem, considering where it may be constantly filled with water or not even getting enough water.
- If not properly constructed, the natural expansion and contraction of the Earth can completely destroy the pavement. Plan your move or move in advance. Always place the hardscape below the frost line to avoid widespread damage to the material.
- Remember to use greens and shrubs whenever possible. Excessive pavement and lack of landscaping can make your space feel cold and unwelcome. Combining landscaping and hardscape makes it feel like it belongs to it and is part of the outdoor environment.
